A public debt is a shackel that binds the arms and blunts the energies of a people, and has been in all ages the most formidable weapon in the tyrant.

The feeling of native honesty, firmly implanted in the hearts of the citizen is made to pay tribute at the shrine of Mammon, and hence it is that the nations of the Old world have found their only relief, from public debts too large to pay and too grievous to be born, in Revolution rather than repudiation.

Fortunately for our young and vigorous Republic neither of the above courses is necessary, but justice to the people who must bear the burden, require that the debt should be paid without unnecessary delay.
